

Letters to Editor

Dear Editor:

You are doing a fantastic job. It is not a easy one. Your efforts are highly appreciated. Please let me know if you need any help. I will suggest that the format of the papers should be like J. Neuroscience. As you know this is Society for Neuroscience official Journal, an international with high quality papers. I like your suggestion that more people should submit to ANS.

Sincerely

Harish Panth, Ph.D

Dear Editor:

I hope the journal is going to be one of the best in the area of neurosciences. At the same time we must now collectively try to have the journal under the category "IMPACT FACTOR". The editorial board seems to be very impressive. They can also contribute articles under the category "Invited research papers". All the best for your efforts.

Dear Editor:

I am honoured by your kind invitation to become Associate Editor of Annals of Neurosciences. However, the fact is that time catches up with us all! I am now Emeritus and, indeed, have been retired for a number of years. Thus, I am no longer active in the field. I hope, therefore, that you will forgive me if I am unable to accept. I send you my warmest regards. You awaken memories of many happy visits to India.

Sincerely,

Merton Sandler, UK

Dear Editor:

Congratulations and Greetings for taking over the Chief Editorship of ANS. I have gone through your mail very carefully and I am excited with your vision and enthusiasm. I am sure you will take the Journal to new heights and this will soon become one of the most respected Journal from India. It will be my honour to be associated with this Journal and together we will make it a success story. I liked the cover page and the style of contents.

Warm personal regards

Dear Editor:

We all appreciate your efforts for a facelift to the academy's official journal Annals of Neurosciences and hope that with your efforts it will be indexed in few years, if not before. While your efforts to make the articles in the last issue of 2009 have been eye catchy, I guess we may refrain from debates on matters that do NOT pertain to neuroscience, or in other words we should restrict ourselves to neuroscience related topics. It may not be a bad idea to get some sort of consent/approval from the IAN EC members before publishing such debates, as the Annals of Neuroscience is after all the official journal of the academy and once something is published there, it reflects the views of the academy. You may also consider adding a neuroscience related Jobs advertisement and upcoming Neuroscience meetings page in the journal, which may be free for academic institutions. I feel we should seek suggestions from as many people as possible and also take advantage of the experience of the senior members that are willing to guide us for advancement of the academy and the journal. I am sure Annals of Neurosciences will gain new heights with input from all ends and your efforts. We all should pledge to submit reviews and original articles for future issues of the journal.

Best wishes,

Dear Editor,

I have glanced through the journal. It looks quite impressive. I am not averse to writing something for you but the topics of my interest and expertise will not fit in what your journal is all about. Here are my reactions/recommendations about the journal that you may find helpful. The new title page is impressive. I think your readers will like it. Including a section, Classics, is a smart thing. You will always have material for that section. Come up with five or six topic areas that your journal will always have material for. You can create subsections under each area if needed. A little extra attention will take care of minor editorial errors. E.g. the heading over the name of the president is Presidents and there are a couple of grammatical errors in your editorial. If you do not have enough material for the summer issue, play with the idea of combining the Summer and Fall issues.

I wish you all the success in this important work.

Sincerely,
